A Mohammedan Paradise.

During the time we remained at Goa: we made an excursion along the coast to the neighboring village of Serada, inhabited by a remarkable race of women, who are celebrated throughout the western parts of India for their great, beauty and unusually fair complexion. They are Hindoos of the Conkany caste, but differ in many respects from any other tribe. They are not allowed to marry, nor are any men, except the priests belonging to the pagedas—of which there are borerad in the village—allowed to reside within its precincts. They are, however, encouraged to become methers; and, like the Amazonian queen -who is said to have visited Alexander the Great, in hopes of thereby ob-taining an heroic daughter—they are very particular in selecting fathers likely from their appearance to per-petuate in their children the fair comlexion and classical features for which they are so justly celebrated. I were not able to accordan how the male children are disposed of, but I believe they are dedicated to the temples and become priests; while the fe-males—or perhaps only the finer spec-imens, for all the children we saw were strikingly handsome-are recred with the utmost care to sustain the character of this village of Houris.— Their origin is shrouded in mystery. They never leave their native village -which they appear to think the most delightful spot on earth-and have a superstitious belief that if they were to ascend above the Ghauts they would immediately die. On landing near the village, we pitched our tent on the beach, and, in accordance with the etiquette of the place, we dispatched a messenger to announce our arri-val. We were soon after waited upon by a deputation of smiling nymphs, who, in the most graceful manner expressed their thanks for the honor we had done them, and informed us they were charged with a message from the matron of the village, requesting the pleasure of our company in the evening to witness a "nautch;" and, after throwing a garland of flowers round each of our necks, they returned to the village. I was much struck with the grace and beauty of these young creatures. They were nearly as fair as Europeans, with beautifully regular features; and their deep blue melting eyes, with their long silken eye-lashes, were perfectly bewitching. Their figures were more stately and their limbs fuller and better rounded, than those of Indian females generally are; and their peculiar dress-a flowing robe confined round the waist by a simple zone, and looped up on one side so as to expose the leg to a little above the knee-closely resembled the drapery of an ancient Greek statue. Their hair, simply braided, was entwined with wreaths of jessamine, and secured behind with a gold bodkin. And the general effect of their charms was not a little heigtened by the unaffected sweetness and simple modesty of their demeanor. For, notwithstanding their strange customs OR -shocking to our ideas of propriety, but considered perfectly proper by them the poor things retain all the native modesty of their sex, and are not tive modesty of their sex, and are not by any means meretricious in their behavior. In the cool of the evening we proceeded to the village, on the sutskirts of which we were met by another deputation of the fair inhabitants, and conducted to the house of the head matron. The village is beautifully situated in a grove of orange, citron, and palm trees, through which tifully situated in a grove of orange, citron, and palm trees, through which the soft sea-breeze comes laden with perfume; and a beautiful salt water lagoon, wooded to the edge, sweeps by in front of it; and in the background the deep blue mountains ap pear to form a barrier between this enchanting spot and the remainder of the world We were received with great coremony by the matron, and all the beauties of the village, in a large open apartment, where we were sprinkled with rose water, and regaled with tea. We then seated ourselves round

AN AUTHENTIC ANECDOTE.-Talleyrand was once in the company of Madame de Stael and another eminent French Lady, whose name we do not remember. "You say charming things to both of us," said Madame de Stael; "which of us do you like best?" The wily statesman artfully repeated that he was delighted with both.

"Ah! but you prefer one of us," continued Madame de Stael; "suppose we were both drowning in the Seine to-night, which of us would you help "I would extend my right hand to

"Yes, but suppose only one of us could be saved, which would you attempt to rescue?"

Talleyrand's diplomacy was pushed to its severest test, but not one whit discomposed, he turned to Madame de Stael and replied :

Madame, you who know so many things, doubtless know how to swim.

The state of nervousness which just now troubles the Imperial grannies in Europe is something pitiable One English journal says: "It is not the first time that America has revolutionized Europe. The French troops returned from helping Wash-ington to defeat England, only to cut off their own King's head. Garmany is saturated with American securities while German emigrants have filled Austria and Prussia with the spirit of Trans-Atlantic democracy. Ireland. is but an outlying settlement of Fed-oral territory," &c.

Capt. Fisk's expedition to Idaho will start soon, and Gen. Thomas F. Meager is thinking of easting his for-tunes with the new Teritory.
